WOMEN’S LACROSSE Loses to Cortland B-8
A numbers game: Contingent faculty watch closely

CARL LAM
Senior Staff Writer

It's a difficult time to be an adjunct professor on campus. Amidst the campus there is continued uncertainty of whether they'll be returning in the Fall. There is one specific ingredient that is contributing to the fiscal commotion — money.

The SUNY system requested $82.2 million from the state for support but didn't see even a tenth of that amount. The 64-campus system only received $76 million, a far cry from the amount they had initially planned for. This problem is not just unique to our campus as it affects everyone from Buffalo to Stony Brook.

In President Horvath's budget presentation, she outlined the priorities for the coming fiscal year. The plan is to ensure that students have access to the full classes and services, avoiding layoffs, evaluating new courses, engaging the campus in new financial realities and committing to collaboration.

That lack of funding from the state has created a shortfall in funding of over $77 million, which was calculated by the amount the university projects to bring in subtracted by the amount that the university is projected to spend. This creates a negative amount, which can then be considered a shortfall.

There is a little glimmer of positive news considering that the university will be able to offset $77 million amount with savings from fees and utility savings. This will leave the university with just $6 million, which can be considered the shortfall.

Essentially, the university is $6 million short on funds. The enrollment in the past five years has declined by 50,000 students, which is significant for a campus of Fredonia's size. Transfer and graduate student enrollment has also decreased since the campus in new financial realities and committing to collaboration.

Within that figure of $82.2 million, 80 percent of that is money that's set aside for tenure track faculty and the remaining 20 percent is for contingent faculty. Provost and Vice President of Academic Aislinn Dr. Terry Brown said without more students, the funding also takes a hit.

"As our enrollments decline, the variable cost in our budget is our contingent faculty," she said. "Our contingent faculty are hired contingent on enrollment and funding. As we see a decrease in our enrollment and revenues, we have to make an adjustment and reduction on the side of our contingent faculty."

Some may wonder why contingent faculty are taking the brunt of the hit, but Brown said she's been monitoring what's been going on nationwide.

"It seems to me it's a way to go around and hold those faculty lines to focus on recruitment and retention of students and shifting the primary responsibility of teaching across the curriculum to our tenure track faculty," Brown said.

When students sign up for courses, the credit hours count toward a faculty member's total of student credit hours. For example, if a student took a three-credit course and the class size was 25, the instructor would generate 75 student credit hours.

In Brown's presentation to department chairs, it was noted that the contingency and tenure track faculty are generating almost the same amount of student credit hours. The numbers are hard to dispute since tenure track faculty generated 76,993 student credit hours while contingent faculty generated 77,052. This data was based on the enrollment in classes from Spring and Fall 2013.

Brown has been working on a plan that goes back to the simple concept of more money and less spending.

"What I’m proposing is that we focus, for the next two years, on the recruitment and retention of our students so that we generate more revenue through tuition and we decrease our expenditures by scrutinizing administrative costs and costs of instruction," she said.

United University Professions (UUP) President Dr. Ziya Arnavut cited the state for putting higher education on the back burner.

"Some may wonder why contingent faculty face and is working to make their job better — which is necessary. I believe that SUNY Fredonia is one of those rare institutions with the solutions that are necessary. I believe that the urgency is now — What I’m saying is that the urgency is now because we don’t want to spend all the emergency savings, which is already minimal," she said.

"Unfortunately, with the contract that we have, we don’t have many rights for the part-timers to protect them," Arnavut said. "I asked the union’s central president, how do we have two memberships [with a member that I can defend and another member I cannot defend]? It’s not right for us and it’s not right for them because if I am a member, I should be able to defend them equally well.

He is aware that this doesn’t benefit the university’s long-term mission but finds that contractual language has prevented them from doing more.

"Unfortunately for part-timers, we can’t do that due to the contract and the language. So they are easy targets to lay off when there’s a need," he said. "From my one data, I said that this isn’t right and the system created some problems because they saw this as a cheap solution. But in the long term, this is hurting the whole system.

"I am at a disadvantage at this situation with a positive outlook on what can be done to save jobs. We are hoping nobody will be laid off, but the reality is that some will be. I am confident that the president, vice president and administration will try their best and I trust that they’ll do the right thing," he said.

That optimism is reflected by Brown as well who said that the universities that will thrive in the near future are those that will be able to work together.

"Those universities are going to come up with the solutions that are necessary. I believe that SUNY Fredonia is one of those rare institutions with the culture of working together that will make it possible for us to find the solutions," Brown said.

Brown recognizes the challenges that contingent faculty face and is working to make their job better in the future.

"I built that in our plan that we, in two years, have a clear pathway for promotion of the adjuncts and that we're paying them at a minimum of $1000 per credit," Brown said. "I am deeply appreciative of what our contingent faculty do here to help our students learn in teaching our students. I know that we have a lot of work to do to address their concerns."

‘Jog for Justice’ brings color to Ring Road

Clouds of color burst through ring road Sunday afternoon, as over 300 runners and volunteers participated in the Jog for Justice. A gender and social change capstone, the color run was marked with sunny weather and a successful turn out, raising roughly $3,000 for Evergreen Health Services in Jamestown.

“We were given the task of doing an activism and social activism project, trying to engage the campus and the community” said Hanna Neumann, co-organizer of the event.

Neumann organized the event along with Natalie Sowa, Samantha Cramer, Gretchen Herb, Kim Keleher and Katherine Rupp.

Sponsors donated a different color, which was thrown at participants at various color stations throughout the color run, which included CMA, STEPS, Pride, BSU, LU, NASU, Hillel, WGST Program, Fred, ASSIST, CEASE, The Health Center, Office of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion and Alumni Hall.

“I think it was really successful for the amount of time we had, and we had little to no budget," said Keleher following the run. CMA, STEPS, Pride, BSU, LU, NASU, Hillel, WGST Program, Fred, ASSIST, CEASE, The Health Center, Office of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion and Alumni Hall.

The run was scheduled prior to Fred West weekend to increase efforts to shed a more positive light on Fred West. Neumann hopes to establish the run as an annual event.

Participants were encouraged to run or walk at their own pace at the all-inclusive 3 K.

“We didn’t know what to expect and it seems like it was really a good turn out.

The color consisted of dyed corn starch.

“It’s so much fun when you get to the color stations because everyone is just cheering you on,” said Brianna Price, sophomore marketing and public relations major.

All of the proceeds will be donated to Evergreen Health Services.

“It thought it went amazing,” said Neumann, “everyone told me that it was wonderful and they hope to see this every year.”

Perhaps western medicine isn't your thing and alternative medicine has always been something that catches your interest. Right in the City of Danbury, on the third floor of a building on Central Avenue, is an adjunct professor who still finds the time to teach on campus.

Gregg Beck is an adjunct professor who teaches in the Department of Theatre and Dance. He earned a bachelor of fine arts degree from Temple University in dance, but that’s not where he headed out.

“I started my college career wanting to be a special education teacher and fell into the arts by accident. I was told I had to take a dance course, which I fought tooth and nail,” Beck said. It was actually his advisor that pushed Beck to take a dance course. His advisor had had polio as a child and took dance all through his life. He told Beck that he should just take the class and that there wouldn’t be any homework. Little did he know that his life was going to change after just that one class.

“My first teacher was amazing and she was an adjunct professor. I totally fell in love with dance. Everything changed from that moment and then I was taking more and more dance courses,” Beck said. “The university finally said that I need to change my major or stop because I couldn’t get credit anymore.”

Beck said that his life would have been completely different if his first professor’s teaching wasn’t so extraordinary.

“My life would have absolutely would have changed if I had gone there and she was just a mediocre teacher and didn’t really care what she was doing. That would have been the end of it,” Beck said. “I would have taken those two credits and that would have been it. But because of what she offered, something resonated deeply in me. I was like a house on fire because I took everything imaginable. It was crazy, wonderful, exciting and terrifying.”

With more knowledge from his classes, it didn’t take long for Beck to align himself with the pros.

“Within a year and a half, I was in a professional company — that’s how fast it went. I started touring right away and going to school at the same time,” he said. “It was very similar to being with the company for eight years before I started my own.”

He started his own company in Philadelphia during the peak of arts funding in the United States. But when that funding he had started to decline, that’s when things started to change.

“My company was growing and the funding was getting harder and harder to get and I started to realize that I was spending more time trying to raise money to do work than doing the work,” Beck said. “I became very demoralized and disheartened and so I wound up having to close my company, my whole heartbreak.”

The closure of the company meant that Beck would have to rearrange his plans for what he was going to do.

“That’s when I went back to acupuncture school. I had it a number of times in my career, and I absolutely loved it. I never imagined that [acupuncture] would be what I was doing,” Beck said.

He earned his master’s degree in acupuncture from The Traditional Acupuncture Institute in Laurel, Maryland.

“Acupuncture happened because I was dancing and because I was aware of my health as a dancer. When I had this acupuncture treatment and was at what occurred,” he said. “I thought then all those years ago that this would be something I’d love to study sometime and I shadowed it.”

He moved to this community and he’s spent the last eight years practicing five elements traditional acupuncture. He also provides additional services at his office as a certified Shiatsu practitioner, a tai chi instructor, and Master Tong style practitioner. Beck said.

“Someone said to me that I should take a tai chi course; it’d be great for your dancing. So I took tai chi and all these years later, I teach it and it’s part of who I am,” Beck said. “I thought ‘What I learned in that course enhanced everything that I do with movement.”

When he came to the area, he also wanted to somehow have some involvement with dance. He went on a whim to speak with Helen Meyers, professor of dance and coordinator of the dance program.

“Much to my delight, she offered me work right away to do dance pieces for the Fredonia Dance Ensemble,” Beck said. “She went on subletical and I taught her classes and then the theater department had me come in because my work as a choreographer was Danbury specific.”

Beck teaches Dance Improvisation, a class that Myers finds important as a skill for artists to have.

“I think it’s very useful for all performers and it’s very helpful in dance, in terms of being able to choreograph, to have that improvisatory experience first,” she said.

He also found himself teaching theater classes, where movement is almost as important as the spoken word. Distinguished Teaching Professor Tom Loughlin is also the chair for the Department of Theatre and Dance, said that Beck helps actors think in a deeper way.

“I think what Terry offers to the department and to the actors is a way of thinking about the bodies and their physicality as communication devices,” he said. “Terry has a very easy way of working with our students and getting them to become comfortable and own their bodies, and use their physicality to create meaning.”

Loughlin also sees a difference in those students that have learned from Beck and acquired knowledge in regard to movement for the stage.

“The difference that I see in the actors who take his classes is that they have a better understanding of what direction they need to go in physically. The fact that Terry is there to plant the seed and get them to have that experience is really important,” he said.

Beck has a pulse on his classroom, which is actually advice that students of any major can take with them and hold onto.

“Of the rules I have in my classes is no judgment. I ask from day one of the class that they’re not judging themselves, other students or their work. I would say to students that the moment that you have fear about what you’re doing, you’ve created a roadblock and then you lose the possibility of what is right in front of you and I base that on my own experience,” he said. “I think back now on what I missed because I was afraid. Who cares? Just throw yourself into every possibility and see what is possible.”

The wait and anticipation of the completion of the new Townhouse Village is almost over. With an expected estimate for the completion date set to the middle of summer, the townhouses will officially be open by Aug. 1, 2014, when students will be allowed to move in.

“Even though the townhouses are still under construction, last week there were student tours with the intention to help create more student interest and show those who are signed up where their living space will be like.”

“We still have openings. Eligible students, who have at least 60 earned credit hours, are eligible to apply,” said Interim Director of Residence Life Kathy Forster. Students who intend on applying must have earned at least 60 credit hours before the beginning of the Fall semester.

What sets the townhouses apart from other living spaces on campus is that students will have an entire apartment instead of half of a room. Each unit in the townhouse includes a furnished living room, full kitchen equipped with a dishwasher, in-unit laundry, two bathrooms and four private bedrooms equipped with full-size beds.

Each townhouse will also include study and banquet areas equipped with new furniture and fireplaces. Within Townhouse Village there will be landscaped picnic areas, basketball courts and private courtyards for each unit.

“The townhouses are truly independent living, allowing students to come and go without restrictive hours,” said Director of Facilities Planning Markus Kessler. “Along with the independent living style come independent decisions. Students will be allowed to choose how many floor levels they prefer in their townhouse. They have the option to choose from one, two or three levels.

Although the townhouses are different than dorms, they do have some similarities. There will be security with card access into units and locks on each bedroom door. Other similar features include Wi-Fi, Ethernet, cable and phone service.

“We will staff the townhouse main office with student assistants, and we will also have a townhouse coordinator in residence,” said Forster.

Although the townhouses are located by lot 9C and the softball field, which are further away from campus, there will still be quick and easy access to classes; conveniently, there is a bus stop located right next to the townhouses.

The benefit of the location is that students will feel like they’re off campus while still actually living on campus. Also, there is a parking lot across the road — residents will have a short walk back and forth.

According to Forster, the cost of the townhouses will be $4,500 per tenant, which will be due by August 1.

“Even though the cost of the townhouses is more expensive than the dorms, you still get an entire apartment that’s completely furnished, and you don’t have to get a meal plan,” said future resident and sophomore childhood education major Colleen Deignan.

The townhouses present a modern village look because of all the new features, as well as the closer proximity between each townhouse. The close proximity between each townhouse and the distance away from campus are what create the feeling of a small community.

Because all units aren’t full and there are only 70 students signed up for next year, members of Residence Life are researching new ways to introduce more students to the townhouses.

“Our intention is to market the townhouses to new transfer students, and we are researching new areas for special interest such as international education,” said Forster.

Weekly tours will be given to promote student interest, and Residence Life will announce the dates of these tours soon.

“It is our intention to have all units filled. We had some student tours mid-April to create some interest, and pictures were posted on our Facebook page,” said Forster.

Students who are interested are encouraged to stop by the Office of Residence Life in Gregory Hall with any questions.

“Fred Fest because it’s my first year experiencing it, and I’m excited to see what it’s about and going to the concerts.”
Dear freshman Courtney,

You’re about to say goodbye to your parents and your best friend. Though you’re one of the most independent women people know, you’ve never lived on your own. You’ve never left the gray, James Dean decorated walls of your room, the big yellow house on Meadowlark Court, the street leading to your school that reeks of manure. As your parents give you one last hug, you’ll sob in your dad’s arms. Your mom will look at you with an expression you’ve never seen, and you will feel like you are leaving your sisters forever. Your best friend will be sad, and you’ll give her a big hug, too — you and her have never embarked on an adventure alone. And as sad as it will be, as much as it will suck, they will all pile into your dad’s big white suburban and drive away from Kasling, leaving you to handle a whole new chapter of your life alone.

You are about to meet one of the best friends you will ever have. As you open the door to the last room of a suite in Kasling, you’ll meet Jessica. She’s a little crazy, but she will love you unconditionally and always be there to make you laugh. She’ll hang dead seahorses from your lampshade, she’ll eat cereal (all the way from Wegmans that you can’t live without), she’ll help you move into your room of a suite in Kasling, you’ll meet Jessica. She’s the godmothers of your children, the old ladies you go out to have coffee with when you’re 85 and you can’t hear what they’re even saying. Morgan and Claire will shape you in more ways than you know. Even though you may have an occasional disagreement, hold on to them. They are integral parts of your life whom you wouldn’t be able to live without. Not many people will be able to put up with the messy, hot-headed, drunk moments in your life, but they can. You will end up living with them for years. Embrace every moment of it.

As you go through your freshman year, you will learn vast amounts about yourself. You’ll think you don’t care about school at some points, but you do. Don’t let that one awful Spring semester GPA hold you back; you’ll make it through. You’ll think you’re too cool for some people and don’t deserve the attention of others. You’ll quickly learn that neither of those things are true, and that you should only surround yourself with the most honest, uplifting, honorable people that Fredonia has to offer.

You’ll learn to be part of a team when you swim on the Fredonia swim team. You’ll be pushed and challenged like never before, but you also exceed all your previous times and expectations. The look on your parents’ faces when you swim a personal best at SUNYAC’s will be worth every single second of hard work you’ve ever put in. You’ll gain some of the best friends of your life on that team — Kori, Andrew. Hold on to them, though your friendships may drift, they will always be important people to you, and you should know that they will always be there.

In the beginning you’ll learn a lot about alcohol. What you can handle, what you can’t, what shouldn’t be mixed and just how much money quarter drafts can save. You’ll drink Mike’s Hard Lemonade when you’re a freshman and graduate to Sam Adams, Blue Moon and Shock Top when you’re a senior. You’ll make friends with the bartenders and look forward to nights at Coughlin’s and Magill’s, and not Sunny’s. You’ll learn how to nurse hangovers and how to help friends recover. You’ll learn about love — or at least what you thought was love. Your heart will get broken.

Down the hall in suites of their own, you’ll meet two extraordinary women who teach you so much about the world around you. Even though you might think they are much different than you sometimes, realize that they are your soulmates; these women are the ones who will be your bridesmaids, the godmothers of your children, the old ladies you go out to have coffee with when you’re 85 and you can’t hear what they’re even saying. Morgan and Claire will shape you in more ways than you know. Even though you may have an occasional disagreement, hold on to them. They are integral parts of your life whom you wouldn’t be able to live without. Not many people will be able to put up with the messy, hot-headed, drunk moments in your life, but they can. You will end up living with them for years. Embrace every moment of it.

You need your friends to hold you together, to tell you what an idiot you are for dating that boy and to help you along the way. The road will be long and winding, but by the end of your senior year you will know exactly what it feels like to be loved. You’ll understand why all of those before him hurt you. All of the assholes who will treat you like shit will be placed in your path to show you exactly how you shouldn’t be treated, and that you shouldn’t settle for anyone less than amazing and perfect for you.

Your freshman year you won’t be too active in any other activities besides sports. While this isn’t the right move for you, you’ll correct your mistake when you dive head-first into sophomore year with The Leader and photography. You’ll discover your love for journalism and find your true passions in life, shaping the rest of your career.

During your time at The Leader, you’ll put in a lot of hard work. You’ll take photos and write stories, make connections and learn how to do what you truly love. When you’re a freshman — and sophomore — you’ll fail to realize that you’ve been living next to your best friend the entire time. Sylvana will be your Editor in Chief, and, even though you didn’t become sisters until senior year, she is your twisted sister. You’ll spend ungodly amounts of time together. Use her as a resource — you are essentially the same person. Though you probably won’t realize it when you first meet her, she will be one of the most important people in your college career.

Choosing to attend Fredonia will be the single best, most influential moment of your entire life. You, as a person, will be turned inside out, changing who you are entirely — for the better. But by the end of your college career, you’ll learn that these laughs with your best friends are soon to be few and far between, so embrace them all before they’re gone. Everything will turn out great.

Love,
Senior, more mature and responsible,
Courtney

Last weekend sparked the premiere of the “The Shape of Things,” the last Walter Gloor mainstage play of the semester produced by the Department of Theatre and Dance. It’s this installation “thingy” that raised questions about moral ambiguity and darker side of human nature.

“The Shape of Things” is a contemporary play written by Neil LaBute; The New York Times claims that LaBute combines “intriguing moral and ethical metaphors with dark portraits of the underside of American life.” In particular, the writer is known for sculpting fast-paced and realistic dialogue that captures the hidden conventions of conversation.

This is a particularly relatable and thought-provoking production for college students. The drama is set in a small university town (similar to Fredonia). The story follows four students who become emotionally and romantically involved with each other and with morally questionable implications embedded throughout LaBute’s script.

“I like the small cast and that it was real life and real things had happened. They were really good at showing their emotions,” said Kara Corlett, a graduate student at SUNY Fredonia.

The production took place on a thrust style stage in Bartlett Theatre, or the college’s “black box” theatre, offering an intimate space for artistic experimentation. Towards the end of the production, several of the cast members sat in the audience. For a brief yet tense moment, the actors were embedded in the audience.

“All four of the actors seemed so natural, and it really was as if we were watching it happening spontaneously. I forgot I was watching a show. It was just like I was watching people interact around me,” said Sean Doyle, a music composition professor at SUNY Fredonia.

The production was directed by Jessica Hillman, a theatre and dance professor. Last spring, she directed “The Diary of Anne Frank,” also the semester’s mainstage play in Marvel Theatre.

In both dramas Hillman has directed, as part of the Walter Gloor Mainstage series, she’s given directions to emotionally charged casts. However, each of the characters in the play struggle to contend with secrets that plague them until the curtains close.

The play follows the development of a budding relationship between Adam (Kevin Stevens), a conventionally unattractive undergraduate English major, and the mysterious yet alluring Evelyn (Danielle Izzo), an MFA art student working on her thesis.

The first scene captures the essence of a romantic comedy, with Evelyn playfully threatening to erect the hidden shaft of a Formichelli sculpture in the museum Adam works in. But as the momentum builds, moral ambiguities begin to surface, exposing each character’s debauched moral principles.

LaBute’s play grows increasingly uncomfortable as it continues. By the conclusion of the play, the darker portraits of the characters surface. Through these dark depictions of humanity, it’s easy to visualize your own visage in the faces of the actors, as they expose the psychological turmoil of humanity bursting at its seams.

According to Hillman, “[the play] raises questions about the meaning of art and how far one can go in service of their art.” The scenic design, by Chad Healy, is visually stimulating — the set in Bartlett itself looks a lot like an art installation, with set pieces that seem as intricate as the character’s personalities.

“Art is always going to mean different things to different people,” said Doyle.

There are three more performances this weekend: May 1, 2 and 3 at 7:30 p.m. in Bartlett Theatre. Tickets are available in the SUNY Fredonia Ticket Office, located in the Williams Center.
Senior Show II: Have a Good Summer

Seventeen senior art majors will be celebrating their final stretch of the semester with an end-of-the-year senior art exhibition. The show titled “Senior Show II: Have A Good Summer” includes artists that practice different mediums including photography, animation, illustration, drawing, painting, sculpture and ceramics.

“This show is super diverse. It’s nice to see all these different mediums collected in one spot,” said Gina Sacino, senior BFA sculpture major. “Everyone here has a lot of talent in different areas, but we all seem to love process. Everything in the show was done by way of tedious process,” she continued.

Sucher and Jessica Winner.

Sharna Beckstein, senior BFA sculpture major.

“Most likely to move into the woods”

Inspiration: Her family as well as the book “Ghana Must Go.”

A lot of my work explores overlooked relationships between humans and nature with the goal of leading the viewer to re-examine these relationships in their own experience of the world. It’s really important that materials used in my work are from the location I’m highlighting. Working this way creates an object that isn’t just about the place, it embodies the place,” said Beckstein. “The piece is alive with the spirit and memory of the location. Paper-making is also integral to my work because I see it as a parallel to walking — each session of making paper is like a journey, and each sheet is like a step,” she continued.

Backstory: Beckstein started as an animation and illustration major. After 24-hour review during her junior year, she switched to sculpture. “I was told my 3D work looked stranger, and I really enjoyed making 3D work more anyway. It was a totally new experience for me because I’d never made any sculptural work before,” said Beckstein.

What to expect: “In Senior Show II: Have a Good Summer my work is a meditation on the life of my dog, Murty, who passed away in early February. I drew a lot of inspiration from the route we used to walk along together and memories of different walks and experiences we had,” said Beckstein. “I feel like this show is a good ‘full circle’ ending to my time here, because my final project for my first sculpture class a doghouse made out of driftwood, zip ties and ramshackle, was inspired by the same walk with my dog,” she continued.

Gina Sacino, senior BFA sculpture major.

“Most likely to own 3D dogs.”

Inspiration: “This inspiration falls on family, including the struggles a family faces both individually and collectively. Her primary focus is vulnerability and how impermanence all are.

Backstory: A Rochester native, Sacino only applied to SUNY Fredonia. She started as a drawing and painting major, but shortly found sculpture to be her passion.

“Art is my best friend. Getting to now has been a whirlwind of happy and sad, and it’s a bittersweet goodbye,” said Sacino.

“Over the years I have learned a lot of things. People aren’t going to love what you do, but art is a selfish medium in a lot of ways,” Sacino says. “I’ve learned to never pretend, always be honest and work hard. If you’re tired by that time and any other part of life, you will never stop learning it’s been damn good,” she continued.

What to expect: “People can expect to see a little surprised. I’m sure there will be a little chuckles, but all I can say is look closely,” said Sacino.

“What most likely to move into the woods and become queen of the birds.”

“My recent work is most directly influenced by video games, the atmospheres they create and my experiences with playing them since childhood,” said Sacher.

Backstory: Due to SUNY Fredonia’s offerings of concentrations of both animation and illustration, Sacher chose this school.

“In late high school, I decided that I wanted to pursue art in college. I was torn between these two (animation and illustration), so the opportunity to study both was very exciting. I’ve spent the last four years learning about my strengths and weaknesses, but senior year has been a time of focusing in on what I really want to do,” said Sacher. “I’m still not sure what I will do for a while, but my journey at Fredonia has given me a good idea of what I most enjoy doing.”

What to expect: “My work is a prototype for each ‘idea’. I’m trying to make a prototype to build it into a kind of exploration-based point and click adventure game, but the version that will be shown in the gallery is mostly an exploratory environment,” said Sacher. She focuses on creating a world for users to find themselves in.

“I wanted to tap into my memories of playing games as a child, and feeling really immersed in the strange worlds, even if I didn’t really understand them,” said Sacher. “One of the biggest new things I’ve learned is the difficulty of letting go of the work to put it up for display,” she continued.

Kenneth Clause, senior drawing and painting major.

“Most likely to live in the woods”

Inspiration: The outdoors, both walking and experiencing it.

“A lot of my work explores overlooked relationships between humans and nature with the goal of leading the viewer to re-examine these relationships in their own experience of the world. It’s really important that materials used in my work are from the location I’m highlighting. Working this way creates an object that isn’t just about the place, it embodies the place,” said Beckstein. “The piece is alive with the spirit and memory of the location. Paper-making is also integral to my work because I see it as a parallel to walking — each session of making paper is like a journey, and each sheet is like a step,” she continued.

Backstory: Beckstein started as an animation and illustration major. After 24-hour review during her junior year, she switched to sculpture. “I was told my 3D work looked stranger, and I really enjoyed making 3D work more anyway. It was a totally new experience for me because I’d never made any sculptural work before,” said Beckstein.

What to expect: “In Senior Show II: Have a Good Summer my work is a meditation on the life of my dog, Murty, who passed away in early February. I drew a lot of inspiration from the route we used to walk along together and memories of different walks and experiences we had,” said Beckstein. “I feel like this show is a good ‘full circle’ ending to my time here, because my final project for my first sculpture class a doghouse made out of driftwood, zip ties and ramshackle, was inspired by the same walk with my dog,” she continued.

Jessica Winner, senior BFA animation and illustration major.

“Most likely to quote the Lion King at any moment”

Inspiration: Winner’s inspiration for her work is ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs; she focuses on the story they tell.

“I have always taken photographs but I really got into darkroom photography during my time here. Animation and photography are both very close to my heart and I’m glad I got to explore both during my time here,” said Winner. “It’s crazy because most of my friends have only seen my photography because that’s a more tangible medium. The senior show is a great opportunity for my friends to really see my work just as an animator,” she continued.

What to expect: “You can expect an immersive experience into the time of the pharaohs. The series is composed of an animation just shy of 2 minutes and two large scale hieroglyphic paintings. Plus more gold than King Tut’s tomb,” said Winner. “I have taken away a sense of pride that I could finish something of this scale. It was a long journey, but well worth the sleepless nights,” she continued.

The Big Read focuses on poetry for 2014 season

REBECCA HALE Staff Writer

Since early April SUNY Fredonia has been celebrating literature, especially the poetry of Emily Dickinson, through its annual, university-wide reading initiative called The Big Read. This past week marked the final events, including guest keynote speaker Dr. Alexandra Socarides from the University of Missouri.

The Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties alone have participated in and put over 40 events as a part of this year’s Big Read, an initiative of the National Endowment of The Arts meant to foster and promote literacy in younger audiences.

SUNY Fredonia students and faculty have helped to put on many of these diverse events, including the production “Echoes of Emily:” A Case of Madness in the Spring,” a Dickinson documentary aired on Fredonia Radio Systems; the production “The Belle of Amherst;” keynote address and meet and great “Planting the Seeds:” a gardening event and discussion; and multiple poetry slams.

Every year, The Big Read allows sections of communities all over the area to explore the arts, to learn about a work of literature to focus on and to base events around. Reed Library director Randy Gadikian has a hand in choosing this work every year and writing to The Big Read in order to receive a grant for the community.

Keeping in mind the college and surrounding communal interests, Gadikian chose the poetry of Emily Dickinson, a potentially controversial collection, as many have a very negative connotation associated with the poet and her poems. However, this year’s Big Read turned out to be a thriving success, with the showcasing of some of Dickinson’s more tender-natured poems.

“There are so many ways that people can connect with poetry,” said Emily VanDette, professor of English. “Sometimes with a single novel it can feel somewhat limiting, but poetry is so diverse.”

VanDette, who had a big hand in planning events for this year’s Big Read alongside other English professors, explained that The Big Read isn’t always so successful. She commented on last year’s Big Read, themed around the book “The Call of The Wild,” which was held in February and attracted less attendance.

“It was a great read, but there was very little going on. There was no discussion, no poetry reading, no discussion. So what you had is this little exercise of reading. There was no real audience to it.” VanDette said.

“We thought April would be a safe bet, and with it being National Poetry Month, it seemed like a good time for a Dickinson Big Read.”

In addition to the many things students have been doing to get involved in The Big Read, many have been writing blog discussions on events and works pertaining to Dickinson and The Big Read. These blog links can be found through the links at http://www.fredonia.edu/bigread/blog.asp.

Fredonia students decided to create and put on a gardening event in honor of Dickinson and her love of nature as a part of their senior seminar project. Lori Otnavala, Chloe Elberty, Maleia Duncan, Megan Gleason and Kaylee Torre encouraged students and community members to participate in their project, “Planting the Seeds: Engaging Emily Dickinson through Her Love of Gardening.”

Students and community members got together last Saturday afternoon to plant a flower bed inspired by poet’s favorite flowers in Bicentennial Park in Dunkirk, including daffodils, forget-me-nots and sunflowers.

Afterwards, a discussion on some of her nature poetry was held inside Dunkirk High School with refreshments.

An event co-sponsored by the Department of English lecture series, Dr. Andrews Socarides was chosen to be this year’s Big Read keynote speaker after VanDette heard her speak at a previous conference.

Socarides is a professor of American poetry, poetic history and 19th century literature and culture. She is also author of the book, “Dickinson Unbound: Her Process, Poetics,” and has recently been working on her newest book on the topic of 19th century women’s poetry in America and its erasure from history. She is also author of the column “The Poems (We Think We Know)” within the Los Angeles Review of Books.

“We have a sense that there were women novelists in the 19th century, [but] there’s not a lot of credit for that. While it may be 19th century, so she’s doing a really important recovery project to focus on women poets, because the only woman poet anybody talks about is Emily Dickinson.”

Socarides gave her keynote address last Wednesday at the Fredonia Opera House, titled “Layers of Erasure.” Socarides spoke not of Dickinson, but rather of other 19th century women poets and explored the reasons for their apparent “erasure” from literary history.

“We are writing in the margins, she told the audience, arguing her position in the address, arguably, was her mention of some of the most well-known and recited pieces of poetry having actually been written by women.

“The Battle Hymn of The Republic,” a famously patriotic song; “The New Colossus,” a sonnet that is engraved on the Statue of Liberty; and the song “America, The Beautiful” were all written by women in that time, yet all have been seemingly separated from their authors, unlike the “Star-Spangled Banner” which was written by male poet Francis Scott Key.

Socarides also gave a later discussion on the works of Dickinson, titled “Just How The Fingers Harried: Dickinson, Her Poetry and Poetry Making,” at the Patterson Library in Westfield as well as a more casual meet-and-greet with students at Fredonia last Thursday afternoon.

In addition, a final poetry slam was held on Friday night in Reed Library, hosted by Peter McGarrity, professor of English. Prize winners included; Ryan Norton, fourth place; Tom Warmbrodt, third place; Julie Legnard, second place; and Robin Hilbert, first place. The slam collected donations for the Thermal Research Fund and raised $133. Each poet presented one Dickinson poem as well as one original.

“The Big Read can grow as big as you want it to, because it’s based on just the principle of reading literature, it’s minimal resources, it’s just human energy and inspiration that can enhance the program, and I think that’s something that’s the beauty and charm of it,” VanDette said.

KORI BARKLEY Staff Writer

ImprovFest is a weekend-long festival of improv-centered events and shows. Fredonia’s improv groups collaborate with other colleges’ to perform and teach the art of improvisation.

“Improv is one of the most fun, freeing, hysterical things to watch and is also an incredible thing to learn. It teaches you how to stop the blocks in your head and to just dive into something.” Mark Diven, junior acting major and Random Acts co-director, explained. “It’s an art form that really is just pure creation; you just have to just dive into something,”

“We hope that holding the Improvathon during Red Fest weekend will bring more of a diverse audience from different backgrounds together that may not be familiar with the art. We want to get people involved and show them how fun improv really is,” said Marisa Caruso, a Random Acts alumni, said.

“I think this will bring a ton of community and joyful fun to this campus,” Diven added.

The event will kick off Friday, May 2, in McEwen 209 at 7 p.m. Here the audience can experience improv by way of observation.

The evening will include performances from improv groups including Random Acts and Improv Society, groups from neighboring colleges, such as Brainwave Improv from the Rochester Institute of Technology and UB Improv from University of Buffalo, and professional groups from the NYC area, Upright Citizens Brigade and Second City.

Each group will present a half-hour set of longform improv, in which performers make the scenes up as they go, or short form improv, in which performers play a themed game with a “gimmick.”

“We each add our own little touch. Each group will present their own shows. It’s an enjoyable evening with a lot of different approaches. It’s going to be so much fun to see how Random Acts did something and compare it to the completely different way Improv Society did something. And then look at RIT’s spin on it. It’s always different, depending on what you’re feeling in that moment.”

Like “Whose Line Is It Anyway?” a TV show where everything is made up and the points don’t matter,” the sets are relatable in that the games are premeditated but audience members give suggestions and commands to the improvisers throughout.

“There’s such a loose and vibrant, hands-off atmosphere at an improv show,” Diven said. The whole thing is comedy so it’s a lot of fun and no one ever knows what is going to happen so it has that kind of excitement to it. It’s a hysterical evening.”

Saturday, May 3, is the day to learn discover the art “hands on.”

Beginning at 12 p.m., also in McEwen 209, various workshops will be taught for free and open to the public. The workshops will showcase a range of improv techniques and teamwork, to character development, game finding and scene work. As the day progresses more advanced training, perhaps from a musical improv perspective, will occur.

Anyone and everyone is invited to come. “It is absolutely accessible, regardless of your age or free time,” Diven explained. “You don’t have to have any background or experience. Just come and be yourself!”

Improv is not something that the theatre department solely is involved in. People from different majors — for instance journalism, audio production and music — are involved in the groups.

“We do have a lot of people of the theatre department in our following, but we’d really like to expand that,” Diven said. “Some of the most interesting stuff that happens from improvisers comes from the other perspective outside of the theatre department.”

This is the first year Random Acts is on board with the Improvathon, and they’re so excited. Share the excitement and join them Fred Fest weekend in McEwen 209. The event is free and open to the public.

"Comedy of Errors" concludes PAC’s season

CLAIRe WOODCOCK and HANNA NEUMANN Staff Writers

Sexual assault has been an increasingly prevalent issue on college campuses that is often swept under the rug. Court cases are emerging out of colleges throughout the country. Trials are popping up out of large universities, including Harvard University as well as Florida State University.

While these cases are scary and depressing in their own way, they also provide opportunity for change. But what about the stories you don’t hear? What about the undocumented cases that take place in Fredonia?

“At least one in four college women will be the victim of a sexual assault during her academic career,” stated statistics provided by Sarah Lawrence College. In addition, the American Association of University Women claims that “37.4 percent of female rape survivors were attacked between ages 18 and 24,” implying that over a third of violations occur during the college years.

Both Courtney Loiacono, the president of the Women's Student Union, and Claire Lunderman, the president of S.T.E.P.S., claim that, based on personal experience, sexual assault is more likely to occur during Fred Fest.

“I believe students are at a higher risk experiencing assault during Fred Fest because of how accessible drugs and alcohol are and the amount of out-of-town students that attend,” said Lunderman.

In recent years, there has been an increase in chaotic and reckless behavior throughout the town. This year, Fred Fest was put on hiatus for about two weeks. While the school’s weekend events have been reinstituted, Fred Fest has a reputation for invoking reckless behavior out of students, which increases the chances of attempted assault.

“We don’t see an increase in reports; however, we know they are happening,” said Ann Burns, the University Chief of Police. Consistent with this statement, the American Association of University Women claims that only “five percent of rape incidents are reported to the police.”

“In my experience, Fred Fest can be a riskier period for sexual assault. Fred Fest can be a riskier time because high alcohol consumption can make students more vulnerable to predators,” said Julie Bezek, the coordinator of Campus Education, Awareness, Support and Effect (CEASE), the violence prevention/victim services program.

“Most people on this campus do not understand what sexual assault is,” said Loiacono. She claims that this is one of the biggest problems surrounding sexual assault cases at SUNY Fredonia.

Because of the low amount of reports, it is safe to assume that both college women and men harbor misconceptions about sexual assault. Sexual assault and abuse is any type of sexual activity that you do not consent to, including: inappropriate touching, penetration (vaginal, anal or oral), sexual intercourse that you say no to, rape and attempted rape.

“Sexual assault causes way more harm to victims than people think. Mentally, socially, physically and can really cause problems in college that can be prevented. These situations can cause suicide, depression, anxiety, lack of motivation and usually dropping out of college. These are the messages that students and people need to understand; then they will realize how important it is to prevent sexual assault on a college campus,” said Lunderman.

Sexual assault can be verbal, visual or anything that coerces a person to engage in unwanted sexual contact. This includes exhibitionism (when someone exposes him/herself in public), sexual harassment and dating violence.

This year, the administration and the students are working together in order to promote a safe and healthy Fred Fest. However, enacting safety and prevention this weekend is everyone’s responsibility.

“We advocate the bystander intervention for students. We all see behaviors that are for predatory and can lead to sexual assault,” said Bezek.

Red flags may include: “someone encouraging you or a friend to get drunk while they drink less, invading your personal space, touching you in ways that make you feel uncomfortable, trying to get you alone or to an isolated location, coming on too strong or aggressive, someone that does not respect your boundaries, someone who tries to separate you from your friends,” according to the FRED Well program of the Counseling Center.

“The school needs to acknowledge that this is a problem,” said Loiacono. “From faculty to administrators to community leaders to students, we need to work together to educate ourselves and others about sexual violence.”

Many victims of sexual assault remain quiet about their incidents, but a group of students at Fredonia are speaking up and sharing their opinions and experiences of sexual assault to bring acknowledgment to sexual assault awareness month, which takes place in April.

Dylan Scacchetti is a sophomore animation and illustration major at SUNY Fredonia who turned the atrium into an immense political statement through his installation project.

On Saturday the women's lacrosse team faced the No.1 team in the nation, the Cortland Red Dragons. The Blue Devils suffered a tough loss to the Red Dragons with a score of 14-2. Despite the loss, the Blue Devils were playing for more than just a win. The team was playing for their seniors and coach Chris Case, who recently announced that he will be giving up his head coaching position next spring.

Both Fredonia goals were scored unassisted by junior attack Marissa Cussins, who now has 48 goals for the season. Kristen Ohberg from Cortland scored five of the goals for the Red Dragons.

Fredonia was unable to produce chances in the attacking end. Fredonia had seven shots on goal, while Cortland had 21.

“Cortland’s defense had really good communication and organization,” said freshman Kristie Kleine. “They worked well as a team and that made it really hard for us to move the ball around and get in behind them.”

The two Fredonia seniors, Mary Bruton and Chelsea Maderer, played their last home game at University Stadium. They were honored during a pre-game ceremony, where they also recognized Case for his contribution to the women’s program throughout his career as head coach.

“We know our areas of weakness from today and we have this week to sort out those issues in order to be fully prepared for what is coming this weekend,” said senior Maderer.

This Saturday concluded Fredonia’s regular season in SUNYAC play. They will head into playoffs with a record of 11-5 overall, and 5-3 in the SUNYAC conference. Cortland will be hosting the Women’s SUNYAC tournament next Friday and Saturday. Fredonia will be playing Geneseo at 3 p.m. If Fredonia can defeat Geneseo on Friday in the semifinal round, they will be in the finals on Saturday and will possibly play Cortland once again.

“We’re going to use this week to fix all of our mistakes and focus on things that Geneseo might throw at us on Friday. We need to challenge each other so we are ready for this weekend,” said Bruton.
track runs to win at Brockport

The men and women track teams traveled to SUNY Brockport over the weekend to compete in the Golden Eagle Run. It was their last regular season meet used as preparation for their championship season.

The men were led by a swarm of individuals who won their events. In the 800m, sophomore standout Collin Malcahy won easily over the field in a time of 1:56.93. In the 5000m, Zakk Hess was able to overcome the competition by 39 seconds in 15:34. Also winning his respective event was captain Chris Shartrand in the 3000m steeplechase with a time of 9:54.

On the women’s side, several events were concluded with Blue Devils atop the results. Going 1-2 in the 400m was freshman Laura Morrison in 59.69 followed narrowly behind by sophomore Amanda Dambacher in 59.69.

In the 5000m, the dominance continued as Anna Hourihan won in 18:48, followed by teammate Becca List in 19:03.

Field events followed the trend as Kayleigh Waselewski took first place clearing 5’1”. Also winning her field event was senior Emily Cumminskey in long jump with a distance of 17’2.75”.

The Blue Devils would begin their championship season next weekend at SUNY Geneseo where they will look to be among the top teams in the SUNYAC Championships.

Baseball wraps up regular season play

Senior Sean Larson threw another complete game in Fredonia’s only win this week in a 3-1 win over the league-leading Cortland State Red Dragons as the men’s Blue Devils baseball team wrapped up regular season play.

They began the week taking on the Allegheny Gators (25-11) on Wednesday, losing 11-5 at home; and a Friday-Saturday triple game series against the Dragons, losing 18-0 and 10-1 Friday and a 3-1 win on Saturday.

Sophomore Carl Wolf and junior Ben Senzor pitched a combined eight innings, with junior Jason Howard getting his first taste of collegiate pitching, throwing a scoreless ninth inning. Fredonia got on the board early in the second inning when junior Kenny Johnston, freshman John Prentice, sophomore Dan Cecilia each earned hits in the bottom of the second. Freshmen Brian Custunigr and Liam Kelly were able to pick up an RBI each, sending Prentice and Cecilia home.

Fredonia would add one more run in the third, a single from senior Connor Lorenzo, showing excellent base running, hitting a single, stealing, being hit to third and ultimately scoring on a wild pitch.

Allegheany answered with runs in the third, fourth, sixth, seventh and eighth inning, taking a commanding 11-3 lead into the ninth.

The Blue Devils squeezed out two more runs in the bottom of the ninth, but were unable to overcome the large deficit, falling 11-5 in the final.

Turning their focus to their final SUNYAC competition, the Blue Devils fell victim to a high-powered Cortland Red Dragons, pitcher Joe Korszun took the start on the mound, throwing for five innings, giving up six runs and six hits. Kory Greer threw a scoreless and hitless fifth inning, followed by a five-hit, four-run pitching from senior Joey Tingue.

Continuing into Saturday, Fredonia was whitening a different tune, with Larson continuing his strong SUNYAC play, throwing a six-hit, six-strikeout complete game, beating the Red Dragons 3-1.

With Larson solving the Red Dragons hitting, it was time for the Blue Devils to outhead the Red Dragons.

The Blue Devils connected for 13 hits with thanks to three hits from Prentice, two hits from Johnston and senior Kyle Kozlowski, sophomore Bobby Frantz and freshman Ciro Frontale. Junior Ricky Mendiola and Lorenzo connected for a hit each.

Adding the win, the Blue Devils finish the season at 11-20 overall, and 6-12 in SUNYAC play, the Blue Devils would score two more runs to secure their win against New Paltz. The two runs came off the bat of Gunnell, who hit a single to centerfield to score Nicholson and Stavich. New Paltz would score one more run in the bottom of the seventh inning to make the final score 2-1.

Game two would start shortly after the end of the first game. The second game was only five innings rather than the usual seven. The Blue Devils wouldn’t be as lucky in game two as they were in game one. New Paltz came out swinging right away, scoring four runs in the first inning. The Hawks tacked on two more runs in the second inning to give them a 6-0 lead over the Blue Devils.

The Blue Devils wouldn’t score until the fourth inning. Their only run came off the bat of sophomore Madeline Medina. She hit a double to right field to score freshman Erin Musharte. Going into the fifth inning, the score was 6-1. Hawks, until they tacked on four more runs. The Hawks won with the score of 10-1.

After their trip to New Paltz, the Blue Devils record fell to 9-16 overall and 6-10 in the SUNYAC.

On Saturday, the Blue Devils made their way to Oneonta where they would take on the Red Dragons for their final games of the season.

The only scoring of the game for both teams came in the first inning.

A local woman named Sandy announced her engagement to her BBQ Chicken Calzone this Tuesday. I met with the hot young couple in the center of town to interview them on their controversial love.

We gathered on a park bench. Sandy looked serene as she tenderly circled the burn holes of her calzone with her finger.

“How did you know you were in love?”

“Oh at first sight. I remember opening-” A bit of the chicken in her calzone plopped onto the pavement. She looked distressed as she stuffed it back inside the calzone.

She laughed nervously and apologized. She continued, “The white cardboard box and looking down and just feeling like my heart was going to burst through the confines of my ribcage.”

“A lot of people would argue that you are not a typical couple. How would you argue this?”

“We have our hard times, like any couple” said a laughing Sandy. “We can get so heated with our debates, he’s a conservative and I’m a liberal, but it really spices things up in the bedroom!”

“Where will the wedding be?”

“She looked down at her calzone and started laughing. “Oh goodness, we are so on the fence between Niagara Falls or Lake Erie. Sometimes it’s like ah! Can we even agree on anything?” I looked at the calzone: silence.

“Are you, attracted to your companion?”

“She began to fondle the corners of the calzone… “Oh, yes. Very much”

“What would you say to people who say this unnatural?”

“Some people say this is ‘wrong’ or ‘unholy’ but I oppose that! Love comes in all different shapes, colors and… sauces!” She laughed while stroking her calzone.

“Who are we as a society to judge this young woman’s love for her calzone?” The world is filled with hate, and this woman’s passionate love for her calzone is harmless. We oppose that! Love comes in all different shapes, colors and… sauces!” She laughed while stroking her calzone.

“I got that drug from the movie "Limitless," did you guys see "Limitless," with Bradley Cooper? There’s this drug in it that makes Bradley Cooper into some kind of ‘stocks genius.’ And then he gets a beautiful girlfriend and pisses off Robert De Niro or something. I don’t know. The point is that if the school diverted its entire budget to the development and production of this drug that makes you into a demi-god, I’d have a decent chance at passing my exams, probably.
